iring squad still used in Utah

By HEATHER LARSEN Universe Staff Writer

y is the 19th anniversary of the last firing squad cion in Utah. The next firing squad execution is laled for Jan. 26.

Albert Taylor, 36, was convicted of slaying an 11old girl from Washington Terrace in 1989. In nber Taylor decided to forgo his remaining appeals sose the firing squad over lethal injection.

Gilmore was the last man to be executed by firing in Utah. He was executed on Jan. 17, 1977 for mulillings in Provo. Utah has conducted 48 executions 852, 39 by firing squad.

ording to a press release, L. Kay Gillespie, a professociology and criminal justice at Weber State rsity, predicts this execution will be the last by firing lallowed in the United States.

spie said if Taylor's scheduled death is delayed for ason, the law will be changed before the convict can to death. The legislative session began Monday.

ever, a spokesperson in the Office of Legislative said no amendments are being made to the Utah death penalty that involve firing squad executions.

"Utah is the only state with a viable law allowing executions by firing squad. Idaho law references firing-squad executions as a backup option but a technicality does not allow them. With Utah being chosen to host the 2002 Winter Olympic Games, the world is watching our conduct here very closely. I don't believe Utahns want the publicity of a firing squad execution right now," Gillespie said in the press release.

Gillespie said human rights organizations like Amnesty International are involved in changing the Utah death penalty. Richard N. Holzapfel, a religion professor at BYU and a member of Amnesty International, said he is concerned with the death penalty when it is political rather than criminal.

Many concerns about firing-squad executions deal with the time, place and manner in which they are conducted. Executions take place in tents, wagons, basements of buildings and door openings. Sometimes the target was missed by one or two of the four to six rifles used. This slowed the death rate which has ranged from 15.4 seconds rch and General Counsel in the State Department to 27 minutes.

Utah's firing squads

- Of Utah's 48 executions since 1852, 39 have been by firing squad.
- · Four to six rifles have been used, one firing a blank.
- Distances have ranged from 15 feet to 60 yards, the usual being 30 feet.
- · Until 1903, executions took place under the direction of the sheriff in the county where the crime occurred, in some cases at the site of the crime.
- · Convicts have been executed in tents, wagons, basements and door openings.

Vatican criticizes haste for capital punishment

Vol. 49 Issue 80

Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — The Vatican newspaper lashed out Tuesday against the upcoming execution of John Albert Taylor in Utah, condemning the "insane rush" for capital punishment in America.

The execution scheduled to take place Jan. 26 has received widespread media attention in Italy following reports that state corrections officials have been inundated with calls from people volunteering to be part of the firing squad.

Taylor, 36, was convicted for the 1989 rape and murder of an 11-yearold girl. The Vatican daily L'Osservatore Romano said the case shows that capital punishment has become so common in the United States that it only becomes newsworthy if a woman is facing death or if carried out by a firing squad.

"The insane rush for capital punishment seems unstoppable in the

Follow Christ with love, selflessness, integrity

ASHLEY EYRING Universe Staff Writer

Being honest, simple, solid and true is the ideal way to follow Christ, a BYU professor of philosophy said at Tuesday's Devotional.

C. Terry Warner told students that often times the struggle to become more like the Savior is lost by hiding behind a facade, not listening to others or becoming self-involved.

Warner said many times people find themselves playing a role and are suddenly unable to distinguish between reality and fabrication.

"We become the most ourselves when we are true to God and to one another," Warner said.

Lucifer's method of fighting includes denying responsibility for actions and spreading discontent, he said. His method can only create "Strife among us divides us," Warner said, "and gradually addicts us to resentment and revenge.

Selflessness and responding to loved ones will help in becoming more like the Savior, he said.

Warner suggests these chains of strife can be broken through the Savior's example — love. Through love, the ability to come unto Christ is granted. By giving up criticism, vulgarity and violence in any form, the ability to come to Christ is made possible.

Through examples, Warner indicated that many times lack of love for one another is the cause for unhappiness in relationships. When this is found, and selfishness is put aside, relationships can then grow and people can come unto Christ.

C. TERRY WARNER

"Satan does not need to overpower us to win the war, he only needs us to adopt his way. Everything depends upon how we choose, Warner said.

Dealing with misfortune can lead to coming unto Christ if it is done purely and valiantly, Warner said. Through making choices, the decision becomes the individual's, he

"Where good and evil are concerned, there is no such thing as being a sideliner or taking a time out," Warner said.

"People become more successful when they put others above themselves. This success can be achieved through performing one act of love at a time.

We become honest, simple, solid, true by following the captain in a war which is fought by means of love," he said.

Gov. Mike Leavitt unveiled his proposed budget Sunday and has seemingly made many friends on the democratic side as a result. His budget of $5.4 billion would allow considerable funding for schools, transportation, child welfare

"The democrats have generally accepted the governor's proposal, and they feel the governor has addressed the priorities of the state and has looked at the key issues of education, highways, health and human services," said Mike Zuhl, the state party

Legislative Democrats also released their plans for 1996 Sunday, proposing $75 million in tax relief. Representative Dave Jones is spearheading a proposal of $18 million for property tax adjustments.

'The property tax proposal would provide tax relief to retirees on fixed incomes, the notion being to freeze their property taxes upon retirement," Zuhl said

This would be beneficial to the elderly who often battle with everincreasing property taxes while facing an income that decreases over the

Though hopeful this would eventually pass, Zuhl said "it could require a constitutional amendment to bring it

The Democrats are also proposing $57 million to be used in a two-phase plan that would remove sales tax on food over the next two years, with half of the sales tax removed this year and the second half coming off next year dependent on the Utah economy in 1997

Springville's new city council forces police chief to resign

CHRISTOFFERSON Assistant City Editor

Springville Police Chief Louis H. Fetherolf resigned Tuesday under pressure from the community and Springville City Council. His oneyear administration had been surrounded by controversy and plagued with problems within the force.

Council chairman Glade Creer said he asked Fetherolf for a resignation Tuesday morning, giving him until 5:30 p.m. to have it in his office. The new council, who officially began its administration Tuesday, was prepared to take other action if the resignation was not given. Fetherolf delivered his resignation letter about 5:30 p.m.

"We did what we had to do," Creer

The former police chief was accused of misconduct by his command support and staff and was under investigation by a committee, made up of three members from the Utah Department of Safety, formed to make a report to the Springville City

The performance audit, presented before the city council on Jan. 9th, found no basis for the allegations of sexual harassment, mismanagement of city funds and violation of copyright laws made against Fetherolf.

Fetherolf was not available for comment but in a recent interview with the Daily Universe stated, "In over 20 years of policing I have never been so maliciously and personally attacked. I've had to do some tough things in police departments to get things back on track, but I have never been personally attacked like this. I have to ask, what's wrong with this picture."

An estimated 250 people showed up at Tuesday's city council meeting and heard the announcement of the chief's Creer said he felt the community was somewhat divided over the issue. "There's always a polarization and a gray area in the middle, but we did what we felt was right," he said.

Council member Ralph Hitchcock will be taking over Fetherolf's administrative duties until a temporary chief is sent in from a surrounding community. Creer said finding a replacement for Fetherolf could be a lengthy process.

By STEVE JENSEN Universe Staff Writer

A collection of rare photographs of people and scenes of Utah taken in the 1890s went on display Saturday at the Museum of Church History and Art in Salt Lake City. The exhibit is part of the Utah Statehood Centennial Celebration and will be on display for the next few months, according to a press release

"Taken and printed by professional documentary cameramen, the photos show Utah people within a wide variety of settings and at various sites throughout the state," said Robert Davis, head of the preparation team for the exhibit. "These photographs will portray their subjects within their environments, at work, at recreation, at worship in other aspects of their everyday lives and how they i acted with the land.

Included in the collection are pictures taken by earlyphotographers Charles R. Savage and George Edw Anderson. Both men captured important events and his ical sites around the time of Utah's statehood.

"They did some remarkable work. Savage in particular worked under very trying conditions."

Savage took pictures of such scenes as the Great Lake, local canyons and the famous driving in of ' Golden Spike" at the "Wedding of the Rails," said-J Telford, BYU assistant professor of photography and v ast Sunday, after the NFL conference championships broadcast on NBC and several big-name NFL players used extremely profane language on live televiin their post-game interviews. The NFL said Monday that it "regrets" the use such profanity but will take no disciplinary action, saying the respective teams l handle the incidents.

VFL should fine players or profanity on live TV

he NFL deciding not to penalize the offenders is a tragedy that condones inexable behavior that particularly affects the television viewing audience. By osing not to fine or otherwise punish the perpetrators, the NFL is declaring that rules governing all other television broadcasts don't apply to them.

he Dallas Cowboys' Michael Irvin and Pittsburgh's Greg Lloyd both shouted ious expletives during interviews after the game, but NFL spokesman Greg ello commented to USA Today that, "It's not something we approve of... (But) part of the emotion of a winning post-game celebration." The same reasoning ald be used to condone a variety of actions: "It's not something we approve of, thitting your girlfriend is all part of the frustration and angst that an athlete sufs during the season.'

the NFL has no official policy of fining players for swearing on television, but yers have been disciplined for making obscene gestures while on the field. vearing is an obscene verbal gesture that likewise deserves punishment. viously the NFL is aware that people keep watching even after the game is over, ich explains the extensive post-game summaries, interviews, analyses, etc. Out respect to the fans that are still watching, the NFL needs to take a stand.

IFL officials should respect the medium of television that allows them to reach ore than 80 million American homes per week and reap financial and popular nefits. The Federal Communications Commission has established guidelines for prime-time television programming, including sports broadcasts. Those rules to benefit the public and must be respected in order to maintain the integrity of padcasting. As a prime-time broadcaster, the NFL should fine Irvin and Lloyd their use of profanity and demonstrate that they respect the rules under which Dallas owner Jerry Jones commented in USA Today, "No action is warranted. ny of us when we choose the wrong word...when we're highly visible, regret it." s noble that the profanity is regretted, but in this instance that isn't enough. Jones knowledged that the players are "highly visible," which means they have tremenous public influence. Irvin and Lloyd need to show the legions of fans who watch nd pattern famous NFL players that their actions are not excusable simply cause they are great athletes. They must know that people are watching them, so ey have a responsibility to their fans to conduct themselves well and set a good cample. Despite repeated messages from famous athletes that they shouldn't be onsidered heroes, they are anyway and should act accordingly.

The NFL needs to fine these two players and send a message to those who were atching and who were exposed to the profanity that they don't condone such tions and that they don't consider themselves or athletes to be above the rules.

Ticket sales hinder basketball enthusiasn

BYU basketball is boring. This is evident from the steady decline in attendance over the last few years. In 1992, the average attendance at basketball games was 20,471. Last year it dropped to 18,838, though the Marriott Center has a 22,700 capacity. This year isn't much better.

The blame for BYU basketball's boring games is definitely not the team. BYU has played exciting games that have consistently gone down to the wire. They have been contenders for the WAC championships every year and have won at least 20 games for the last five years. No, it isn't the team's fault that games are boring, it is the fans. Or rather, the lack of them.

The catch-22 to the whole problem is that as attendance falls, the games have less electricity and excitement, so attendance drops more. This cycle keeps repeating, and every year the average attendance

by Bryan Wursten Universe Staff Writer

BYU has tried everything to halt this cycle - from better half-time shows to contest giveaways. But it isn't working.

While we don't know why students are staying away from games — the reasons range from decreased free time because of harder winter schedules to extreme lack of interest — we do know why the general public isn't coming. It's the over-priced

Although student prices are just $5 per ticket, the price for non-nose bleed seats in the general admission section is $12 per ticket. For a family of four, that means a very expensive evening out, without ev factoring in the price of buying hot dogs caffeine-free Cokes. The price for seats the benches in the general admission se tion is also $5, but usually only resilient foolish college students can endure sitt on benches for three hours, or standing the same amount of time.

These inflated prices might have ma sense when basketball tickets were hard come by, but today, when nearly 5,0 seats remain empty every game, it does

BYU should reduce ticket prices for general public. There are many famil who would love to attend a game, but j can't afford it. The added benefit is that attendance increases, the games w become more exciting and BYU basketh will no longer be boring.

Intramural T-shirt 'holy grail' of college life

While at BYU, I have made a very short list of things I would like to Jon accomplish while attending this great university. I have accomplished some of Mano these goals, such as working for The Daily Universe (yes, this was something I actually aspired to do), eating taco salad in the Cougareat on a regular basis, and finding out the real name of that weird statue in front of the library (hey, I didn't say they were great goals).

But there is one goal that has eluded me so far. It is my holy grail, something that keeps me awake at night. What I want most from BYU is not my degree, not a great educational experience, and certainly not marriage. No, my greatest conquest is — an intramural T-shirt.

Now, this might seem a bit trivial to some, but I won't hold them accountable for their ignorance. You see, an intramural T-shirt isn't something that just anyone can have. It's only awarded to intramural winners; you can't buy it, it's priceless. It's not the T-shirt itself, but what it represents. It says "yeah, I might not be good enough to play college ball, or even for a lot of ward teams, but I'm the best here at what I do, as long as my division level is Actually, I did win a T-shirt my fresh-when friends and I won the college bowl. For those who don't know, college bowl is basically a glorified ver-

Pursuit, except you don't have a game board and those cool little game pieces shaped like pies.

But I don't consider winning that T-shirt a fulfillment of my dream. For one, it's not a sport. It's not like you can steal a question from the other team and then yell "Get that outta here!" after you answer it correctly, it just seems like such behavior would be inherently wrong

Another reason that T-shirt isn't satisfactory is because I never answered any questions - my friends only asked me to play because they needed a fourth player. So during the game I would just sit there and wonder why it is important to know whether Spiro Agnew parted his hair on the left or the right. And when it was answered correctly, I would wonder what kind of person would even know such a thing.

The last reason the T-shirt is insignical. cant, and I hope this doesn't offend ar body, is that the whole year we just beat bunch of nerds. And I really can't fe good about that. Of course, we beat the at their game, so I guess that means we a bunch of super-dorks.

But I think this is finally the year I wwin a real intramural T-shirt. With a fi place in basketball, I can erase numero frustrating semesters of intramural bask ball, flag football, co-ed water polo, a co-ed volleyball. I've recruited a bunch of ringers, a we're in the lowest possible division of the intramural office reads this and way br to bump us up a division, I'm going deny we have ringers — I only write to in the name of creativity). We alread killed our first opponent by 13 points, a if we don't take first, it'll be a bigger up than the Cowboys losing the Super Bow If we take first place, I told my form sports editor that I wanted to put it in Universe. But he said that would be waste of space, and no one would care.

But seriously, I can't think of a bet story than about some 5'8" Japane American, with marginal basketball skill leading his team to his first-ever intrame al championship at BYU. It would be be ter than "Rudy.

Practice daily charity

Last week I listened to a young lady cry as she related the story of her need to visit with her ecclesiastical leader over a transgression that she had committed. Such an act required her to lose her endorsement and miss at least one semester of school. It was a sad tale to listen to. But it really made me wonder just who is worthy to be attending this religiously-founded institution and who

We all talk about taboos such as fornication, smoking, drinking, drugs, abuse, etc. being serious sins and should be avoided at all cost. We spend hours reading material published as deterrents to aid us in our following the righteous path. But this student wants to know why when leaving campus and going out of her way to allow a merging car to enter her lane, the other car's occupant honked his horn and gave this student the "finger." I want to know about the other sins that seem to lay the foundation for the adversary's cause and work. I want to know what fellow human being, inconsiderate and self- ance for that person, but is also endanged ish behavior, and man's inhumanity to man, have on all of us. Yes, it is a sin to have "wrong" ideas about the cute guy sitting next to you in P.E. class. But is it also wrong to cut in front of someone in line and give little or no thought for the person you may have just offended? What about the individuals who, while sitting in the narrow hallways waiting for classes to begin, stretch their feet out into the aisle impairing the flow of traffic and forcing others in both directions to walk single file? Or those that feel the high-traffic and traveled paths, like in the bookstore and Cougareat, are the prime location for visiting with a passing friend? How about the one who ate in the Cougareat and left the mess that created a chore for the next person to complete before they could enjoy their own meal?

We worry about the serious sins and transgressions and how we need to make sure we don't fall prey to them. But I see very few worry about the idea that little consideration or thought is given to our brothers and sisters here on this earth with us. How many people do you know think about the fact that their tailgating the person in front of them is effects such sins as thoughtlessness for your not only showing impatience and intoler- Orem that person?

BYU is a wonderful institution filled in the the possibilities of godhood. I say because each of us has that potential v us. But we need to remember that because we don't commit the "big among sin and transgression doesn't we've lived a perfect life.

The next time you walk through that look over your shoulder to see if anot close behind and hold your hand on the just a few seconds longer. Lecture to discuss Utah life during the Great Depression

Emeritus General Authority will address challenges he faced growing up in the 20s

> By LAUREN COMSTOCK Universe Staff Writer

An emeritus general authority will speak about the challenges of growing up in the Salt Lake Valley during the Great Depression today at 10:30 a.m. in the Conference Center auditorium.

Elder William Grant Bangerter will present the annual Caroline Hemenway Harman Lecture. His speech, titled "Passing the Test," will focus on the near-pioneer circumstances in which he grew up.

The annual address honors the Caroline Hemenway Harman Continuing Education Building.

Elder Bangerter and his family were neighbors to the Hemenway family during the Great Depression.

Sister Harman served as Relief Society president in a ward that now covers a large portion of West Valley. The bishop was William Henry Bangerter, Elder Bangerter's father.

Harman led a simple kind of life with challenges characteristic of the time period. Elder Bangerter will talk about these challenges and about Harman's example being an inspira-

Harman was widowed three times and raised 14 children, including those she adopted from her second marriage, said Duane Hiatt, director of editorial and media production for the Division of Continuing Education.

"She was the kind of person we would hope we would be in the Continuing Education Department," Hiatt said.

The Division of Continuing Education continues Harman's work and the annual lecture is a discourse prepared all year to honor her name, Elder Bangerter was born in Granger to William Henry Bangerter and Isabelle Bawden.

He was sustained as an assistant to the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles April 4, 1975.

Elder Bangerter became a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy in October 1976 and served in the presidency from September 1978 to April

He was named an emeritus general authority Oct. 1, 1989.

The BYU lifestyle, defined?

When I first heard Cake's song "How do you afford your rock 'n' roll lifestyle?" I thought, who has a rock 'n' roll lifestyle? I'm pretty sure it isn't me, and it's probably not too many of my friends. But what kind of lifestyle do I have? Now I'm the editor of a newspaper section called "lifestyle," and I'm wondering, what does that mean?

Our lifestyle includes where we live, who we live with, what we do for work, what we do for play, when we sleep, when and what we eat, among other things.

For most of us, our lifestyle has changed over the years. When we started out, we all had a pretty similar lifestyle. It probably involved crying whenever we felt wet in our diaper or hunger pains in our stomach. As we got older, our lifestyles became increasingly diverse. Now we're at BYU, and we all have different lifestyles that are tied together by a few common threads. As a lifestyle desk this semester we'd like to look at those common threads that tie us, as BYU students, together, as well as what fills in between those threads.

One of the common BYU lifestyle threads is the student aspect. Part of our lifestyle includes going to classes and doing homework. For some of us it means late-night cram sessions, for others a steady, spread-out homework diet. For most of us it means being poor now and hoping our studies will land us a good job in the future, so we won't always be

It means eating with barely any money and no time to cook.

A significant portion of our lifestyle isn't shared by our friends at other colleges. Most of us are LDS, and even if we're not, we promised to abide by LDS standards. On Sunday we all get dressed up and go to campus to attend three hours of church meetings in classrooms, auditoriums, or even the testing center. Once a month the whole student community flocks to "firesides," with friends, spouses, many with dates.

On Monday night, we all go to "family home evening" with people who don't remotely resemble family members to do things like make chalk drawings in the parking lot or bake cookies.

from their love for a grueling two years before they can be reunited (or maybe decide to move on). If they decide to get together, even though the couple is the same age, the girl is probably a senior and the boy is a sophomore or still a freshman.

On the weekend we do things students all over do — we go dancing, go to concerts, watch movies, go see plays. The bar scene isn't real hip in Provo, but a lot of students buy milk shakes on

We came to BYU to get educated, get a good job and be around other LDS students our age. We don't like to admit it, but most of us are hoping to find a spouse before we move to an area where there aren't so many potential eternal companions around. Many have already proved successful and some students are already beginning the next generation of Cougars.

As for me, now that I've bought my books, paid my rent and bought a few groceries, what I want to know is: How do you afford your BYU lifestyle? Maybe I'll write a song....

'Friends' brings friends together

By NATHAN MORLEY Universe Staff Writer

I watch it, you watch it, in fact, some BYU students schedule their Thursday nights around it. NBC's hit TV series "Friends" has, for many, become a weekly ritual.

"Friends," the story of six New York twenty-somethings, has gone from TV sitcom to cultural phenomenon. What is the "Friends" appeal?

"You can relate to their relationships. It's fun to watch with your friends because it's such a bonding thing," says Andrea Dahl, of Gilbert, Brooke Roner, a junior from San Francisco says "Friends" is easy to relate to because the storylines and situations based on relationships and careers are familiar to most collegeaged people.

"My friends and I get together to watch 'Friends' because it's really the geted to the college audience," Roner says. "We can relate to it." Not only does the show have good bonding potential, but "Friends" has become a showcase for trendy fads and fashion. "Friends" character

Rachel has become a trend-setter for women who want a new do. Whitni Skousen, a stylist at Studio Cassini in Orem says, "Most of our young, female customers walk out the door with the 'Friends' cut. Nine out of 10 girls sit down and ask for the

'Rachel,' or the 'Friends' cut." Whatever the reasons, BYU students seem fond of "Friends."

"My wife and I usually try to schedule our Thursdays so we can watch 'Friends' together," said Ryan Rich, a senior studying zoology. "After all, in a depressing world full of war, government bickering, and the burdens of adulthood, my wife and I make it a point to soak in TV's version of Calgon, better known as 'Friends.'

"Norway is really different from Provo. In Norway, religion is not nearly as dominant," said Gundersen, Not a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Gundersen, a senior majoring in advertising, was surprised by how much religion was stressed at BYU.

But when the ski coach Skip Merrick offered him a scholarship to ski for BYU, it was an offer he couldn't refuse.

"I was in high school at the time and I didn't know what I'd do after. It sounded like a good idea to come here, and I haven't been disappointed," said Gundersen.

more plentiful than in Norway, where much of it is machine made.

The biggest competitive adjustment that Gundersen faced was shifting from the Norwegian focus of individual performance, to the American focus on team accomplishment.

"I like both, but it's more exciting as a team sport," Gundersen said.

Gundersen started skiing when he was only 7 years old, and began racing at the age of 9 with a team in Trondheim. He continued to race every year after that in both Norway and Sweden.

The greatest moment of his skiing career came at the end of his first year at BYU, when he finished with the second run best time in the slalom at regionals. This surprised Gundersen because he had been plagued by a leg injury, and hadn't skied much prior to his fifth place finish at regionals.

Merrick has high expectations for Gundersen this year too, especially in the slalom.

'I think this year he's going to have

"From his performance last week it looks pretty.

The secret to Gundersen's success has been his work ethic, Merrick said. "He's always doing more than everyone else as far as training," Merrick said. "He's really good as far as staying in shape and really conscientious about his health.' Merrick said this is typical of many of the Norwegians he has coached in recent years.

Gundersen's weekly training schedule is four days of lifting weights and three days of running.

The key this season for Gundersen will be to improve off of his already quick start. Merrick said that if he can avoid a letdown and the injuries that plagued him his first year, he should finish strong.

He is expected to finish in the top ten in both the slalom and grand slalom at regionals in February.

When he graduates in August, Gundersen will put skiing on the back earth has not been a disappointment to step up because we lost one of our career in Norway. Why is he going

Skiers open strong despite little practice

By SEAN SUNDWALL Universe Sports Writer

The BYU's men's and women's ski teams got off to a quick start finishing first and third, respectively, in the first giant slalom competition of the 1996 in Breckenridge, Colo.

Coach and skier Skip Merrick, a senior from Ketchum, Idaho, took first place, and Norwegian standout Borre Gundersen, also a senior, placed third overall in the men's giant slalom to lead BYU to its first place

"I felt I had a good run on a pretty tough course. I just relaxed and tried to ski clean," Gundersen said.

The Cougar's win in Colorado was a sweet surprise to Merrick, who was worried that a lack of practice time would hamper his skiers.

"We've been training just one night a week, and usually we train every day. I was really happy with the men's team for winning because we had one day of training, and we won," Merrick

The scarcity of snow in Utah has forced the Cougars to move practices from Sundance to Park City, allowing for fewer workouts. This put BYU at a big disadvantage going into the race because many of the competing schools had practiced for 25 to 30

Other top finishers for the men were senior Jason Streit (9th), sophomore Pat Cilbrith (12th), and freshman Ryan Westenskow (18th)

On the women's side, BYU's top finisher at Breckenridge was junior Susan Muirhead, skiing to a seventh place finish while freshman skier Erika Coombs (9th) and sophomore Alison Bergesen (11th) helped the Cougars to their third place finish.

Merrick said that Muirhead would normally have finished higher but the lack of practice prevented her from doing better.

According to Merrick, Bergesen is the team's number two skier but Coombs has started to ski well also.

"I look for Erika to do some real good things for the team. She doesn't have a lot of racing experience, but (she) is a really good athlete," Merrick said.

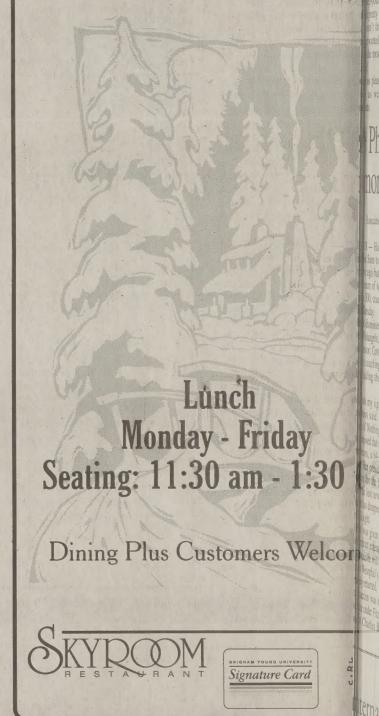

Saturday's competition will pit the BYU men's team against a talented Colorado Mountain College team, which attracts many of the nations top skiers to its campus in Steamboat Springs.

The women's team will be challenged by Colorado State, Denver University and Colorado Mountain

Wrestlers view road losses as building blocks for team unity

By DAVID BROBERG Universe Sports Writer

With a win at Cal State Fullerton and losses against defending WAC Champion Fresno State and Cal Poly, the young Cougar wrestling team learned some important lessons during its three dual matches in California this past weekend.

"We were dealt some adversity in California, but instead of folding, the setbacks made us stronger and more unified," said first-year assistant coach Larry Nugent.

One of those setbacks came during Saturday night's match against Cal Poly. The Cougars had come from behind in three matches including an 8-6 overtime victory at 150 pounds by junior Greg Schroeder. After being behind 5-0, Schroeder took down his opponent with two seconds left in regulation to force the match into over-

Going into the heavyweight match, the Cougars were ahead by three points. But during Cougar heavyweight Tracy Vail's two-minute injury time-out, the referee awarded Cal Poly six points for an injury default, even though Vail wanted to wrestle. This default gave Cal Poly the victory.

"That loss could have really crushed us, but we came together as a team with a covenant for the rest of the season." Nugent said.

Instead of blaming outside reasons for the losses, such as the referee or other conditions, Nugent said, "we looked inside ourselves to correct our own mistakes.

Besides being a bit sluggish, the Cougars didn't have many mistakes in a 25-6 victory over Cal State Fullerton. The highlight of the match came during a last-second takedown by Vail, a true freshman from Rupert, Idaho, wrestling in his first match for BYU. With nine seconds left and trailing by a point, Vail used a move that took the opposing heavyweight out of position, allowing Vail to win on an exciting takedown.

Against Fresno State, Cougar wrestlers failed to win a single match despite several close decisions.

Much of downtown would be difficult

A woman in black, carrying a bunch of lilies, entered the Okamuras' shop to pick up yellow-and-white cakes specially prepared for the memorial service of a relative killed in the quake. In the course of a brief, murmured conversation with Mrs. Okamura, she broke down in tears.

Down the street, 77-year-old Utako Maeda was perched on a wood-andcinder block stool in front of a makeshift cardboard table, stuffing batting into a pillow cover in front of her futon shop.

"Our houses all burned down before firefighters could spray a single drop of water," she said. "Lots of people

When her own house collapsed, Maeda was buried in debris, but her son dragged her out. Her shoulder and knees still hurt. Her 88-year-old husband's health deteriorated quickly after the quake and now he is dying,

Before the quake, the neighborhood was far from affluent, but it was vibrant, a maze of wooden houses, noodle shops and grilled chicken vendors. Now, the streets are quiet.

Only a tenth of the neighborhood's former residents have been able to return, settling in prefabricated build-

Those who have come back worry that land-ownership changes, money troubles and the city's new urban plan might make it hard to hang onto the little they have.

Mrs. Naka, 55, works at a shoe factory; her husband stays home. Naka has to drag himself outside to a community bathroom.

"I hear so much talk about Kobe's recovery, but it has nothing to do with us," he said.

For many quake victims, now when the reality of their situation sets in — is the most difficult time, said Satoru Deguchi, who volunteers to help quake victims.

"With a year passed, I'm afraid many Japanese are starting to forget what happened in Kobe that day,' Deguchi said. "In this part of the town, we are still far from recovery."

A SMILING, STRIDING SIMPSON: O.J. Simpson arrives at a West Los Angeles office in December where he listened to depositions given in the civil case against him. A new book authored by three jury members says Simpson's criminal trial acquittal was shaped by a lack of confidence in the police and the evidence.

Book by 3 jurors says Fuhrman key for O.J.

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — From the moment the forewoman of the O.J. Simpson jury saw Mark Fuhrman, she thought he was a "snake."

And after hearing from him, she didn't believe a word he said.

'My first feeling when I saw him, he sort of looked like a Ku Klux Klan or a skinhead with hair," Armanda Cooley writes in her book "Madam Foreman," which comes out this

The book — in which Cooley corroborates with two other jurors who are also co-authors, Carrie Bess and Marsha Rubin-Jackson — highlights the importance the former detective played in the outcome of the trial.

'Fuhrman was the trial," Bess wrote. "Fuhrman found the hat. Fuhrman found the glove. Fuhrman found the blood. Fuhrman went over the gate. Fuhrman did everything. When you throw it out, what case do you have? You've got reasonable doubt right before you even get to the criminal-

Fuhrman, the first detective to arrive at the murder scene, was portrayed by the defense as a racist who tried to frame Simpson. The mostly black jury was played an excerpt from a tape of Fuhrman uttering a racial slur.

But in "Madam Foreman," the three black jurors denied race played a role in their thinking and contended their speedy not-guilty verdict was shaped mostly by their lack of confidence in the police and the evidence police handled.

They also saw prosecutor Christopher Darden as a token black placed at the counsel table by the district attorney's office.

And they downplayed the importance of the courtroom demonstration in which Simpson seemingly struggled to pull on the gloves.

The 237-page "Madam Foreman" is the latest Simpson-related book published by Dove Books, which also put out books by two ousted jurors and by Nicole Brown Simpson's friend Faye Resnick.

A version will be available on audiotape and features the voices of the authors.

Cooley said although she didn't like Fuhrman at first, his initial testimony 'did not look good for O.J." But as Fuhrman underwent cross-examination by defense attorney F. Lee Bailey, his demeanor changed, said Cooley, the juror who sat closest to the wit-

"His breathing patterns shifted and, from where I was sitting, you could see him squirming. You could see the tension in his hands," she wrote. "Fuhrman kept pushing his feet up against the back board of the stand. You could tell there was just a little anger building up in him. I'm thinking, 'This man is lying.'

The jurors also disliked the lead detective in the case, Philip Vannatter. They said they believed he was lying when he said he didn't initially consider Simpson a suspect the morning after the murders of Ms. Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

Also, they said, they found it suspicious that Vannatter didn't promptly book into evidence a vial of Simpson's blood.

The jurors said they generally admired all of the lawyers, although Johnnie Cochran Jr. was described as cocky and his closing argument as overblown. None of them faulted Cochran for making an appeal to race,

In fact, Cooley said she felt Darden, a late addition to the prosecution team, was being used because of his

"I remember thinking he was there as a token because the jury was predominately black," she wrote. "I thought the prosecution felt they needed this particular balance. To me, this was the first 'race card,' as it has come to be called, and it was played

U.S. 'vulnerable' to diseases

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Infectious diseases are on a global rebound, killing thousands more Americans, surviving potent antibiotics and possibly evolving into stronger bugs as the climate changes, a coalition of doctors warned Tuesday.

The world is "more vulnerable than ever before," said Nobel laureate Joshua Lederberg, who led a call by the Journal of the American Medical Association and 35 other international medical journals for a global battle against infections.

The development of antibiotics once had doctors predicting infectious diseases would be conquered by now.

Instead, in the past decade new infections such as the AIDS virus suddenly began killing hundreds of thousands, older diseases like tuberculosis returned and bacteria began evolving to defy treatment.

Tuesday, doctors in 21 countries published 242 studies to illustrate the scope of the threat.

Among the most alarming: The U.S. death rate from infectious diseases rose 58 percent between 1980 and 1992, and a snapshot of middle America found antibiotic resistance growing fast.

That doesn't mean people should panic, Lederberg emphasized. Instead, the findings should persuade world governments and drug makers to fund research to fight back — and doctors to stop overprescribing antibiotics, a practice that boosts drug-resistant

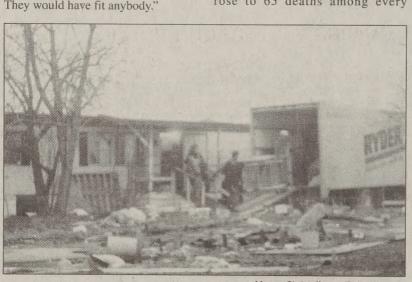

"We have the rumbles of volcanoes that are going to erupt," he said.

"We don't know if the eruptions will be tomorrow or ... in 30 years, but the scene is set for any number of outbreaks. Our technical abilities could give us the necessary defenses.

Here, infectious diseases became the third-leading killer of Americans in 1992, claiming more than 166,000 lives, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported.

MOVIN' OUT: Residents of Laurelwood Trailer Park must either sell their homes to Provo City or move to another location to make room for the new Provo mall in East Bay. Some residents feel the prices they've been offered are less than they should be.

New Provo mall forces residents out

By PAUL WALKER Universe Staff Writer

Plans for the new Provo city mall in the East Bay area are on track but some local residents are quite put off,

The area zoned for the structure was previously a large trailer park that at one time contained 150 mobile homes. The land was purchased by the city and each resident of the trailer park was offered a price for their trailer or else the owners had to move to another park. At least one of those residents, however, did not feel the city was fair in their prices or dealings with her and her neighbors. Margaret Dudley, 78, a five-year resident of the park, said the city offered her $9,000 for her mobile home and she refused, saying that it wasn't high enough. Her next-door neighbor sold her home for $3,000.

These are our homes. We bought and sacrificed for these, and the prices they gave us were ridiculous," she

Construction on the new mall will begin in late February or early March, said Steve Gleason of the Provo office of economic development. It is scheduled to be finished in the fall of 1997. The tentative name for the new mall is the "Provo Fashion Mall," and it is expected to be the largest mall in

Last week, Dudley's mobile home was one of three that were still standing in the now desolate park. It was arranged for her to move to another trailer park after her refusal to sell.

"A lot of people are unhappy and it's been a real mess. I hope it (the mall) sinks into the ground myself," she

In Columbus, Ohio, antibiotic resistance is rising among patients with a dangerous form of bacterial pneumonia that spreads to the bloodstream, reported Dr. Joseph Plouffe of Ohio State University.

In 1994, 14 percent of Columbus pneumonia patients weren't helped by penicillin, up from 4 percent in 1991. Plouffe blamed overuse of antibiotics, saying doctors often give in to patient demands for the potent drugs to combat simple sniffles

APEX MARKETING

GUARANTEED HIGHEST PAY

Pest control sales were fantastic last summer! Sales representatives for each of the three large pest control marketing companies averaged within only 1 sales of each other. The difference is that Apex Marketing paid out over $2000 more per representative on average. Although the program is roughly the same all three companies, Apex is willing to pay its representatives way more cash!

You Choose:	APEX MARKETING	Salesnet	Eclipse
SALES	PAY	Pay	Pay
100 Accounts	$7,900	$6,530	$6,700
150 Accounts	$13,035	$9,230	$9,700
200 Accounts	$18,170	$13,030	$13,450
300 Accounts	$29,625	$19,030	$17,800
400 Accounts	$42,660	$30,030	$27,000
500 Accounts	$53,325	$44,530	$37,100

Not only is our pay scale the highest, but Apex Marketing also pays you for every agreement you sell. Other companies still pay by levels of 10 to 15 sales and not for each agreement. This could cost you another $1500. If you fee you can sell pest control, Apex Marketing is the only smart choice!
